Campared with the proportion, as established in other countries between the wants of trady and the supply of currency, our currency is too much inflated, and the consequence is that as long as we have money to export (we mean other than our paper money. Viz. gold and promissory notes like our much too cheap U. S. Bonds) we shall be drained of our abundance. But a day of settlement is sure to come?

The last fortnight, with its fast of a sudden return of ow honds from Europe, should want as against a forther increase of our indebtedness to foreign countries, and compel us to look out for a remedy. When someof our bankers—as they did a faw days ago—petition the Secretary of the Treasury to lend $13,000,000 of rold to the banks, that these might be one export of U. S. Bonds, and are now monthly these might be one export of U. S. Bonds, and are now monthly on account of the absence of ascendand for exchange, a mere pelliation for the absence of ascendand for exchange, a sure to lower the gold premium in its first effort, but an evil in its secondary effects.

the absence of ademand for exchange, a more polliation for the improvement of our currency is offered, sure to lower the gold premium in its first effort, but an evil in its secondary effects.

In my opinion, This Tributes was right when it called on Congress for a decisive action on our currency, and demands its vigorous contraction. Legislation is to thime for the evil we are now laboring under, and to legislation we have to look for relef.

Alt. Hooper's bill is partly casted in the right direction. By compelling the National banks to provide for a redesposion of their setes in Bostos, Parladelphas, and New York, it will bring about a more conservative polacy in the laste of their notice, but this will not suitile, and more has to be done. Mr. Hooper makes the tax on circulation one-quarter per cent per half year, and alotishes the tax on capital 1 would greatly increase the tax on expital and on deposits also, but I would greatly increase the tax on expital and on deposits also, but I would greatly increase the tax on expital and on deposits also, but I would greatly increase the tax of capital and on deposits also, but I would greatly increase the tax of capital and on deposits also, but I would greatly increase the tax of capital and on deposits also, but I would greatly increase the tax of capital and on deposits and it is atterly wrong that the issue of notes should, to the injury of the general welfars be made a source of prefit in benkers. During the war, when our expenses greatly exceeded our Income, and we had to pravide for an easy money market to float our beans, it was very well to fester the creation of National banks by making the business profitable through numerous privilege. But now, when we must get rid of our aspendbundant currency, we must curtail these privileges. I would, therefore, propose the following measures to be adopted by Congress:

First: A into of these per case per summon, the National Bank circulation from the Slat of Magnetic and.

Second: At least teenty per cast of the Cu
